Thank you for the opportunity of reminiscing about Dominique. I first met Dominique as I was consulting on horses of Ecurie Wildenstein. I was impressed with this veterinarian who had focused his practice to equine osteopathy. He had a great following and it was great to watch him working around horses. He also seemed to be able to achieve results with a technique that I was unfamiliar with. We became good friends and he gave me English translations of two of his books. Subsequent to that, we had Dominique over to Colorado State University to participate in courses on integrative therapies.

As you know, he continued to investigate his work and rationalize his results. He had sent me a handwritten plan that I received shortly before he died. He will be greatly missed. He not only found a way to help horses but also did this with good collaboration from his colleagues who practiced conventional medicine and surgery (such as me). He never pretended to be able to treat everything and selected his cases and referred others to people like me when it was appropriate. He will be greatly missed.

Sincerely,
Wayne McIlwraith
